In Uganda, there are many organs that promote peace and security. Among these include: the army, the police and the crime preventers.

These organs have been established to perform different duties; for example, the Uganda People's Defence Force (UPDF) are charged with the responsibility of protecting national boundaries. They make sure that no enemy crosses to Uganda through her borders.

On the other hand, the police are responsible for promoting law and order in our communities. They ensure that thieves do not break into people's homes or even shops. They (the police) carry out programmes to sensitise people about how to ensure that there is security and peace in their communities. In addition, the police detect crimes through their intelligence officers.

The crime preventers work hand in hand with the police to prevent the occurrence of crimes. They do this by reporting the suspected criminals to police. In other words, they are the spies of the police. By doing so, crimes in our communities have reduced.

Since the police and other organs cannot maintain peace and security without the public's help, it is important that people accept to help the police so that the police can help them. This can be done by reporting criminals in their communities.
